And on his lips the quiet smile-The soul's adieu to earthy strife-And on his face the deep repose, We never saw in life Peaceful be his rest, and deep, Let him sleep.

No tears for him! he needs them not. Along life's drear and toilsome road Firmly his manly footsteps trode, Striving to bear his weary lot, With such a pride upon his brow, With such a pain within his heart-The firmness of a manly will. Vailing the secret smart.

Oh! it is well the strife is o'er, That thus so peacefully he lies, Unheeding now the bitter words, The cold, unpitying eyes. Fold his mantle o'er his breast; Peaceful be his sleep, and blest, Let him rest.

. No sigh to breathe above his bier, No tear to stain the marble brow. Only with tender, pitying love, Only with fasth that looks above, We gaze upon him now.
No thought of toil and suffering past—
But joy to think the task is done,
The heavy cross at last laid down, The crown of glory won.
Oh! bear him genily to his rest—
Oh! gently heap the flowery sod,
And leave his body to the dust, His spirit to his God.

The Rev. Mr. Spurgeon.

DESCRIBED BY AN AMERICAN EDITOR.

Mr. Fulton, editor of that able journal, he Baltimore American, who has just returned from a tour in Europe, thus describes a visit he made the Park street Chapel, in London, to hear the renowned preacher, the Rev: Mr. Spurgeon. Mr. Fulton says:

In personal appearance, Mr. Spurgeon has none of those characteristics that would five feet five inches high, rather stout, with a round, fair smooth, full face, and low forehead. His heir is black, and is parted in the centre, whilst his eyes are blue and his complexion, fair. His countenance is mild and pleasing, and he wears no hair on his face, except a small tuft under each ear. John CHAMBERLAIN, having just returned his face, except a small tuft under each ear. would scarcely suppose that he was troubled with any beard at all. As to age, be does not look to be thirty, though I learn that he is about forty.

The services commenced with reading a hymn, showing that he is a beautiful and impressive reader, and that his voice is attuned and capable of the most distinct and impressive enunciation. After the hymn was sung by the congregation, he opened the Testament and commenced reading portions of the 22d chapter of St. Luke, rein
